Q2: Arizona depends on elected leaders to make smart policy decisions that will create the conditions for individuals, families, and businesses to succeed. During the Great Recession Arizona suffered a high rate of people losing their homes, job losses around the state, and huge drops in state revenue. The major ongoing statewide policy directions have been shrinking state government, cutting spending in public K-12 and higher education, eliminating safety net strategies for struggling families, and phasing in additional permanent tax cuts. What direction do you support going forward to promote economic health for families and the state? (Check all that apply)

Continue to shrink government with additional permanent tax cuts and strive for Arizona to reach the lowest tax rates in the nation.

Invest in roads, water supply, and other infrastructure.

Strive for Arizona to build a strong and educated workforce with revenue sources and investments in education and family support.

My wife and I started a family run business in 2015. After getting first hand experience of burdensome regulations and tax code, confusing county and city taxes and the many fees we encountered I thought I could make a difference making it easier to start a new business, expand an existing business or move an existing business to Arizona. I also want to grow the economy by keeping taxes low, growing jobs through small business and regulation reform. I am ashamed of AZ being last in the nation for teacher pay and next to last for in general school funding. I will do all I can to get some relief for our K-12 teachers as long as there is accountability. I don't want to just throw money at the problem, but I want to keep the good teachers here in AZ to assist in our children's education. I believe in school choice which I think leads to competition between schools. When you have competition you have improvement. Arizona has three of the top ten schools in the nation so it's not entirely a money issue. We need to emulate those top schools and keep our best teachers. AZ is ranked last in the nation for teacher pay so it is difficult, at best, to attract good teachers. Along with increased pay comes increased accountability so we can ensure teachers and schools are performing to our standards.

Q3: Arizona stands out among the states in skyrocketing growth in the number of children living away from their families in temporary foster care due to abuse or neglect. The consequences include huge expense to taxpayers, an overwhelmed and unsustainable child protective services system, a shortage of foster families with children left sleeping in offices and living in shelters, and life-changing trauma for thousands of children. Do you support more focus on strategies like parent mentoring, child care assistance, family counseling and monitoring, and substance abuse treatment to prevent family crisis and help more children stay safely with their families?

I believe that a lot of this was addressed in the last year or two and the stats are turning around. Without knowing all the numbers I can not commit to an increase in funding and the funding they already have must be accounted for (audited) and spent wisely.

Q4: Business CEOs, parents, and teachers across the state are calling for increased investments in public education. The Arizona Joint Legislative Budget Committee (JLBC) data show a 25% drop in total state funding for K-12 education per student – a drop of $1,200 per student from 2008 to 2016. According to the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP), just over 1 in 3 eighth grade students in Arizona score proficient in math and fewer than 1 in 3 fourth grade students score proficient in reading. The new withdrawals from the State Land Trust approved by voters for ten years in Proposition 123 settle inflationary funding, but restore less than $1 for every $5 of what's been cut from the state budget for schools. Will you support increased investments in the state budget every year for: a) a workforce of qualified teachers with competitive compensation and quality professional development; b) classroom curriculum and supplies with updated textbooks and technology; and c) school building maintenance and repair to give students safe, clean, and functional places to learn.

Depends. As I have already stated it is not just a money issue. With increased funding comes increased accountability. I also believe strongly in pay for performance.

Q5: Reading proficiency by third grade is the most important predictor of high school graduation and career success. In 2016, 6 in 10 Arizona third graders failed the AzMerit reading test. Reading success begins long before third grade. Many children start Kindergarten already behind their peers; poor children have heard 30 million fewer words in their young lives. The high cost of quality child care and preschool education put them out of reach for many hardworking parents (costs of up to $8,000 per year or more). Often, the children who start out behind stay behind. Please indicate the strategies you would support to promote reading success: (Check all that apply)

Before I can commit to any of those I need more data. I need to know how it will be monitored. As I said above we should not just throw money at this. It needs to be done right.

Q6: Arizona has cut taxes every year (except one) for the past 26 years. Tax cuts passed just since 2009 will remove $900 million from the state budget every year when they are phased in. Tax credits, like tax cuts, are permanent because they require a 2/3 vote of the legislature plus the signature of the governor to reverse or reduce. Tax credits have been growing far faster than state revenue, the state's economy, or state investments in public education without any evidence that they have created a single job. The amount taken out of state revenues for tax cuts and tax credits is not available to invest in public district and charter schools. What are your priorities for tax policy? (Check all that apply)

Continue to cut taxes every year. ,

Adopt tax policies that make the system more fair for low and middle income families.

I believe people can spend their money wiser than government can and with less waste. Charities are a great resource and if people had more of their own money to spend they could to send it to a charity to help with the issues as they see fit.
